The Yale Journal for Resumé Padding

A Yale Undergraduate Student Publication.

Editorial

Dear Reader,

On behalf of the Editorial Board, the Board of Advisors, and the entire staff, we are pleased and most honored to introduce you to Yale's newest undergraduate publication, The Yale Journal for Resumé Padding (or YJRP – To help you remember our acronym, use this mnemonic device: You Jest, Richard Pryor!). As the great philosopher Immanuel Kant once said, "A man cannot realize his full potential without an adequately padded resumé." Though resumé-building is a universal concern for Yale undergraduates, no existing campus publication explicitly addresses that need. Founded upon that principle, the YJRP is the only campus publication to openly admit that it exists not for the gratification of the reading public, but for the sole purpose of giving responsible-sounding titles to a number of lazy, marginally-affiliated students.

In developing our fine publication, a great number of issues were considered, specifically the difficulty of finding summer jobs and internships this year. We produced the YJRP with these concerns in mind, hoping to foster a campus-wide dialogue about the importance of resumé-padding in the aftermath of September 11th. This endeavor has been furthered by the ability to print at a very cheap cost and to design the entire publication in Microsoft Word.

Finally, we at YJRP would like to thank all of the individuals who have contributed minimal time and effort to this publication. Without your apathy, laziness, and desire to look good without doing any work, none of this could ever have been completed.

Respectfully,

Charles U. Bacharach, Editor-in-Chief
